Introduction

One of the most important requirements of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA) is that employers must make reasonable accommodations for the known physical or mental limitations of a qualified applicant or employee with a disability, unless the employer can demonstrate that the accommodation would be an undue hardship or pose a direct threat to the employee or other employees.

A vocational rehabilitation counselor can play an essential role in facilitating the interaction between an applicant/employee and an employer. The counselor can assist in building employer confidence that a qualified individual with a disability can perform the essential functions of a job with or without a reasonable accommodation. Accommodations must be considered on a case-by-case basis. This Guide provides a worksheet to use during the interactive process of reasonable accommodation consideration.

Definitions

Definition of Disability

To be protected under Title I of the ADA, an individual must meet the definition of disability, that is, a person: 1) with a physical or mental impairment that substantially limits one or more major life activities, or 2) with a record of such a physical or mental impairment, or 3) who is regarded as having such an impairment. Examples of major life activities include, but are not limited to: learning, thinking, concentrating, interacting with others, caring for oneself, speaking, performing manual tasks, walking, seeing, breathing, hearing, sleeping, working, etc. (Anyone who qualifies for Vocational Rehabilitation services meets this definition.)

Essential Functions

Essential functions of a job are tasks that are fundamental to the position, as opposed to marginal or occasional duties that may be performed by the worker. Factors for determining essential functions of a job include: 1) position exists to perform the function, 2) there are a limited number of employees among whom the function can be distributed, and 3) the function is highly specialized and requires the incumbent to have expertise or ability to perform the function.

Reasonable Accommodation Description

A reasonable accommodation is an adjustment to a job, the work environment, or the way things are usually done – productivity enhancements to allow the client to perform the job. The goal is to reduce or eliminate workplace barriers to enable a qualified individual with a disability to perform the essential functions of a job and enjoy equal benefits and privileges—to bridge the gap between the maximum ability of the individual and the essential functions of the job. The need to provide accommodations may occur at any stage of employment, such as application, retention, or return to work.

Since reasonable accommodations are determined on a case-by-case basis, there are many types of modifications, including: modifying the job, modifying a policy, modifying a facility, considering alternate placement options, using an alternative product or piece of equipment, modifying or designing a product, and obtaining a service.

Undue Hardship

The only limitation to an employer's responsibility to provide reasonable accommodation is that no modification is required if it would cause undue hardship to the employer. Undue hardship exists when an accommodation is difficult, expensive, disruptive, or when it would create a fundamental alteration, in other words, when an accommodation would change the nature of the business or the worker's job description so much that it would no longer resemble the original. Undue hardship is determined on a case-by-case basis by comparing nature and cost in relation to employer's resources and operations.

Direct Threat

An employer may require that an individual not pose a direct threat to the health and safety of himself or herself or other persons in the workplace. Direct threat: 1) means a significant risk of substantial harm that can't be eliminated or reduced by reasonable accommodation, 2) must apply to all applicants or employees and not just to individuals with disabilities, 3) must be made on a case-by-case determination, 4) must be based on the individual's present ability to safely perform the essential functions of the job.
